Excerpt from Courier, Vol. 35: News Magazine of the National Park Service; October, 1990

To interpret this room is a ranger's greatest challenge because the high expectations of the visitor and, indeed, the events which transpired here, make it the most energy-filled room in the entire park. I take my time, manipulating the effectiveness of the pause at key points so that visitors can process the significance of those events. I begin my presentation with a brief summary of the constitutional issues that gave force to the Revolutionary movement. The phrases No taxation without representation and virtual versus actual representation seem to flow much more freely and assume a much greater meaning in this chamber than they do in the confines of my classroom at school. Gradually, I introduce my visitors to Richard Henry Lee, the Virginian who proposed the resolution on independence. Moving behind one of the delegate tables I attempt to take them back to June 7, 1776, by resurrecting Lee's spirit with his words: That these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states. That all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved!
